Went to a cafe buying coffee it seemed like a good idea. The hotel receptionist gave me something like a condom. A plastic membrane to make sure you don't touch each other to avoid spreading the disease. I wore my bordeaux leather heels and tight pants. Walking around with some chickens and girls I just met. I climbed a pile of dirt. Looking from there I glimpsed a couple of big excavators. I was ecstatic to go there, it was the only thing on my mind, these big machines to move-around dirt. Like having a love affair with Michael Heizer in the dessert of mankind. He's making an artificial ancient city at the outskirts of LA. He's been digging since 1970's.

Somebody even loves exile. New world is home world. The rules of the game changed, now everybody is acting like chain birds, home prison, we do it for each other, but it's the most totalitarian our nation has been in a while. I wonder if more people would live in the countryside if they didn't have a job. And if somebody was calling "Hey I got a job for you". A strange voice in the phone. I would love a job, yes thank you. Can I work from home? Infinitesimally Home world. I miss my party. In town everybody is doing everything together. Coffee, films, dinner, window shopping and the metro is nothing without strangers. Most of the houses are not meant to live in, only to sleep, like a coffin. You don't want to be locked up in them. Small town village is different. You need to work, to pay. Crossing fingers for a crashing real estate market. Coronina. In 50 years we will maybe praise her for lowering global fuel emissions. Paris Deal 2020.

A perfect time to get a puppy.
